The Portuguese were the first Westerners to arrive in Japan in the 16th century, having left behind some gastronomic traditions that were adopted by the locals in such a way that they reached our days as truly "Japanese". This is the case of "Tempura" and the "Castela" cake, which we honor here as the base of the cheesecake. This is a "cousin" of the traditional Portuguese "pão de ló" (sponge cake) that was left in Japan by the Jesuit priests who arrived there in 1543.

The Lisbon sidewalk is one of the icons of Portugal, having been "born" in Rossio Square at the time of the reconstruction of the city, post-earthquake of 1755. The pattern used, which was called "Mar Largo" (Open Sea), later inspired the famous sidewalks of Rio de Janeiro and Macao. This dessert is our tribute to this unique Portuguese art form, which has its ex-libris in Lisbon, making the city a true open-air museum.

"When I was a little boy, in Germany, every Sunday my grandmother Hermine prepared this very traditional cake for family lunches, using the honey she produced herself. It was always my favorite dessert, not only for the taste but also for the love with which it was made. It's my tribute to the person who taught me how to enjoy cuisine and helped me to become what I am today."
